UNDERSTANDING THE SPORT

HOW IT ALL BEGAN

Bows and arrows were used for hunting and war 10,000 years ago, but firearms made them obsolete for military purposes. As a sport, however, the popularity of archery has continued to grow. Today, archery is practised in approximately 150 countries. It was the only sport in the Stoke Mandeville Games, the precursor of the Paralympic Games, in 1948, and has been on the Paralympic programme since its first edition, at Rome 1960.

ABOUT THE COMPETITION

Practised by athletes with cerebral palsy, paraplegics, quadriplegics, amputees, people with dysfunctional and progressive diseases and multiple impairments, Paralympic archery has the same goal as the Olympic discipline: shoot arrows onto a 10-circle target from a distance of 70m using a recurve bow, or from 50m using a compound bow. The competition area is identical and the equipment similar.

If they reach the required index, Paralympic athletes can compete in the Olympic Games. Such was the case for New Zealander Neroli Fairhall, who competed at Los Angeles 1984, and of Italian Paola Fantato, at Atlanta 1996.

There are two classes of events:

- Open: Athletes with leg impairments and wheelchair users or with balance impairment, shooting standing or sitting on a small bench
- W1: Athletes can have leg impairments and be wheelchair users

Categories for the blind are not yet part of the Paralympic Games

DID YOU KNOW?

Spanish Paralympic archer Antonio Rebollo – two silver medals and a bronze medal – starred in one of the most exciting moments of Barcelona 1992 Olympic Games. In the opening ceremony, he shot a flaming arrow to light the Olympic cauldron, cheered by the spectators in the stadium.
